How GitHub Copilot Boosted Productivity

GitHub Copilot was a game-changer in this project. It accelerated UI and logic improvements, helped me iterate faster, and provided high-quality code suggestions. Here is the story of how Copilot transformed the event card UI:

Before Copilot: The original event card UI was functional but basic.

Using GitHub Copilot: I prompted Copilot to suggest improvements for the event card UI.

Senior Software Architect: Refactor Plan

- Create a dedicated `render_event_card(event)` function/component in your UI code.
- Use Streamlit's `st.markdown` with custom HTML/CSS for the card, or use Streamlit's container/column layout for structure.
- Add a new CSS class `.event-card` for the card container, with background, border-radius, shadow, and margin.
- Refactor the recommendations rendering loop to use this card component for each event.
- Remove any leftover or broken HTML tags in the event rendering logic.

Next step:

I will implement these improvements by creating a new `.event-card` CSS class and refactoring the event card rendering logic.

> Searched for files matching /components/ui.py, 2 matches
> Searched text for def render_event_recommendations
def render_event (/components/ui.py), 2 results
✓ Summarized conversation history
✓ Read ui.py, lines 1 to 61
✓ Read # eventbot.css, lines 1 to 61
✓ Read ui.py, lines 62 to 122
✓ Read ui.py, lines 123 to 182
eventbot.css
ui.py +5 -5

✓ Checked `ui.py`, no problems found

The event recommendation card rendering has been refactored for a cleaner, more modern look and improved UX. The new `.event-card` CSS and card structure are now in place. There are no errors in `ui.py`.

You can now review the updated event cards in your Streamlit app. Let me know if you want further tweaks or additional UI improvements!

Copilot Response: Copilot provided actionable suggestions and code for a more modern, user-friendly card.
